

I think that the Do-Not-Call Implementation is a great idea. I feel that the solicitation is getting way to out of hand. I feel that it is very much an invasion of privacy. I feel that I shouldn't have to have over ten unwanted hang ups on my answering machine when I get home. I feel like my family and I should be able to sit down and eat dinner without the solicitation calls. They always conveniently know the times to call is around dinner, and that is very rude and disrupting. I have also asked numerous times to have my unlisted phone number deleted from there lists, and I still get the very unwanted soliciting calls. I feel that I pay for the right to have my phone number unlisted for my privacy and it is basically useless from the solicitors, which I realize that they get my number from creditors. But, I am paying for a service for my privacy and with the telemarketers it is a violation. I am sure that some people might like the calls, but everyone I know is disappointed in all the calls. I have also had experiences that the telemarketers call and they start asking you all of these personal questions and all of the sudden you are signed up for a credit card, these people talk so fast you don't realize what is happening at all times. I appreciate the fact that I can express my opinion and actually do something and make maybe a little bit of an impact on my future.
